Department of Education granted him the Distinguished Educator Award and the South Carolina State House hung a commissioned portrait of him in its chamber. Evidence that market-oriented health care systems are more efficient than public health care systems, however, is absent even in countries such as the US with its market-oriented health care system. Almost twice as many financial resources approximately 15 per cent of GNP are required in the US to provide the same type and quality of care available in Western European countries that spend only seven or eight per cent of their GNP - a comparison which indicates that great inefficiencies remain in the most market-oriented health care system in the world.
